Dr. John al-Amin has spent nearly three decades in higher education, utilizing his skills, knowledge, and experience within the community college, California State University, and the University of California systems. He has served in various roles in institutional or district operations, covering instruction, student services, and administrative services. Whether as a program instructor, research fellow, student advisor, analyst, or administrator, his focus has always been on student success and achievement through the effective use of college and district resources. Under his leadership, his institutions have overcome audit findings, implemented fiscal stability measures, improved programs and services, and worked to ensure institutional facilities were used effectively to meet the class and service needs of students and the community. As the Vice Chancellor for Finance and Administration for the City College of San Francisco, he provides management and direction over district business and accounting operations, risk management, facilities construction and planning, buildings and grounds services, police and safety, and informational technology services. He has earned degrees in Economics (BA), Educational Administration (MA), Public Policy (EMPA), and Management (Ph.D.), completing his undergraduate work at the University of California, Riverside (UCR), and graduate studies and certifications at institutions that include UCR, UCLA, Claremont Graduate University, and Syracuse University. He is also a former community college student-athlete and student government leader, starting his undergraduate work at the College of Alameda before transferring. He is a member of the Omicron Delta Epsilon and Golden Key International Honor Societies, has served as an officer and President within Associated Students and Graduate Student Associations, and he is a lifetime member of Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, Inc. He enjoys spending time with his family and also volunteers as a coach and mentor for youth in his community.
